Aptitude Testing is essentially for Working Breeds, but can include some Hunting, Herding or Utility Breeds should any fanciers desire it. It tests steadiness of character, hunting drive, sociability, the ability to unwind rapidly after stressful situations etc.

This test was developed by the Swedish military. At present it is widely used in Scandinavian countries for pet animals too and has been approved by KUSA as a mental testing method.

Training is non-important, and dogs could be either trained or non-trained, as it simply reacts to a variety of stimuli, such as a mechanical rabbit, noises, shapes or creatures. The dog is put under some mental, but no physical stress between exercises; the dog is allowed to unwind totally before commencement of the next exercise. Although it is a non-mandatory test, the successful animal will receive a title, which will appear on their KUSA Reg. Certificates. It is a useful medium for discovering the mental make-up of one's breed or pets and can be of great use in any breeding programme.
